"The most important thing that drives me is my dedication to helping others, in any way that I can. One of the ways that I want to pursue helping others is to become a registered nurse. Ever since I can remember, being a registered nurse is what I wanted to do. Not for the money, not for the job stability, but for the pure reason and passion for helping others."

"As I begin driving toward my future, I want to study the science of making others feel better about themselves and the world we live in by studying clinical psychology. I have always been curious about human emotions and behavior, but my current sophomore year AP Psychology class jump-started a newfound, stronger interest."

"For as long as I can remember I have been fascinated by the events of the world. Politics and government have always fascinated me. I do everything in the hope that it will put me in the place to be involved in politics for good. I watch and read the speeches of activists. I look for characteristics that true change makers have in common. The more I learn the more I am driven to public service in politics."

Addison Clark
Boise High

"My recognition of the importance of communication motivated me to bridge the gap where I'm able. So, when I think about the question "What Drives You?", I think of being a bridge of communication for others, being a source of information, and a person that eases others' struggles. It's no surprise now that I wish to pursue medicine."
