"I train horses and enjoy working with horses and people. I plan to major in equine management with a minor in psychology at Utah State University. I plan to get a certification in equine assisted services. I have experience teaching equine therapy riding lessons to young kids as well as children with special needs, this experience has given me the chance to explore my interests and passions. Horses are something that have brought me a lot of joy and healing throughout my life. I love the idea of being able to share that joy with others, especially people who especially need it."

"What excites me the most about architecture is that it has the perfect mixture of art and problem solving. It is a unique field where you have to be a dreamer and mathematician at the same time. To me, it's not just about drawing a cool looking building or a skyscraper; it's about the experience within the structure. It's about figuring out the flow of a floor plan and imagining how people will actually use the space. I want to be a person who makes those places better, safer, and more inspiring."
